Tylenol overdose guidelines

Flickr: tonystl

One tablet of paracetamol = 500mg

Patients whose plasma-paracetamol concentrations are above the normal treatment line should be treated with acetylcysteine by intravenous infusion (or, provided the overdose has been taken within 10–12 hours, with methionine by mouth). Patients on enzyme-including drugs (e.g. carbamazepine, phenobarbitone, phenytoin, rifampicin, and alcohol) or who are malnourished (e.g. in anorexia, in alcoholism, or those who are HIV-positive) should be treated if their plasma-paracetamol concentrations are above the high-risk treatment line.

NOTE: \*Cooperative adult patients who have potentially ingested greater than 10g or 200mg/kg, whichever is less. For paracetamol ingestions  $\ge 10g$  activated charcoal should be offered until 4 hours post-ingestion. † If paracetamol concentration will not be available until  $\ge 8$  hours post-ingestion, commence acetylcysteine while awaiting paracetamol concentration. ‡ Those patients with initial paracetamol concentrations more than double the nomogram line may benefit from an increase in acetylcysteine dose (see text) and a serum paracetamol and ALT concentrations should be checked at the end of the acetylcysteine infusion. § Patients should be advised that if they develop abdominal pain, nausea or vomiting further assessment is required.
